User Guide

Welcome

I hope you enjoy using this new Index, the first edition. The Index provides details of permanent and landscaped labyrinths around the world in university, college and research settings, creating a unique database. It includes 269 labyrinths, in 18 countries, with brief information about location, history, design and use of each labyrinth and links to images and further information. The locations range from city centre campuses to remote field study centres. The labyrinths include patterns laid out on the ground with rocks and pebbles; mown labyrinths, maintained year on year; labyrinths designed entirely from recycled materials, fully paved labyrinths and many more. The reasons for their creation and their current uses are as diverse as the labyrinths themselves, though there is near universal use of each labyrinth as a peaceful place for quietness, for contemplation, for easing heart and mind.

The Introduction (Part I, a separate pdf) introduces the idea of the labyrinth; provides an overview of the Index; discusses the research; highlights examples of contemporary work with the labyrinth and includes a case study by Professor Mary Donahue of Chadron State College, Nebraska, outlining the creation of the College's new labyrinth (in a unique setting) in 2020. This User Guide covers some practical matters to help in the use of the Index.

Copyright

These articles (Part I and Part II) are copyright Jan Sellers 2021. You are welcome to use this material for personal research, provided that due acknowledgement is given as to the source. Please contact the author to seek permission for any commercial, promotional or mailing purposes.

What's included? What's not included?

The Index includes labyrinths at universities, at higher education colleges and at colleges of adult and further education, both partner colleges (where an adult and further education college is linked to a university and provides one or more programmes to BA/BSc level) and community/technical colleges not offering programmes to that level. The Index also includes a number of remote field study centres and other research centres with university links.

The Index does not include work with canvas and other temporary labyrinth installations (see more on this in the Introduction). This valuable work is entirely dependent on individuals or teams (to make the labyrinths available) and would form a different research project. Many examples are featured in Learning with the Labyrinth: Creating reflective space in higher education (Sellers and Moss, eds., 2016).<sup>1</sup>

Searching the Index

The Index can be searched by key words of your choice, like any pdf or Word document. It will be easiest to read through some Index entries first to familiarise yourself with the layout. I have restricted use of acronyms and abbreviations; Table 4, the Index Key at the end of this User Guide indicates those which you may find helpful, used in Column 1 of the Index.

Discoveries, Contacts and Visits

I have aimed to make it as straightforward as possible for a reader to find out more about any of the listed labyrinths, with links to further information and images where available. It's been a great pleasure to learn about so many labyrinths: enjoy your own journey of discovery through the Index, however you choose to explore it!

Each labyrinth is commonly (though not always) the responsibility of a team, centre or department within the university or college and it appears to be unusual for this to change. Recognising this stability, I have provided where possible a direct link to the department concerned, and where it exists, a link to a specific labyrinth-themed web page (all links were working as of August 2021). I have prioritised teams rather than postholders: to include the contact details of named individuals would considerably increase the work of keeping the Index current. The potential for networking and sharing ideas is considerable; based on the information in the Index, it should be straightforward in most cases to contact the team or department concerned.

In a few cases it has not been possible to identify a named team or department, particularly where the labyrinth has no presence on the university or college website, or where the campus map is the sole reference. There may well be information on campus (even on labyrinth signage) but it is not available online to the public. This does not mean that the labyrinth is not used. It may be regarded as a landscaped feature like a garden, available for quiet walking and reflection without a programme of events; or events may be organised through the university's intranet or through word of mouth.

I have given specific details about finding the labyrinth, with many links to campus maps, identifying nearby buildings where the labyrinth itself is not marked. Please let me know if I've made mistakes! I hope that, map or directions in hand, I myself would be able to find my way on foot to any of the campus and city labyrinths (I would still ask for directions in the Arboretums and Botanic Gardens, where there are often maps on site but not online. I would definitely ask for local advice in wilderness and desert locations).

Please also note that an entry in the Index does not imply availability, public access or any permission to visit, especially in these pandemic times. Readers will need to make their own enquiries: a link is provided to every institution's home page (or to a home page for the specific campus) as a starting point, in column 2. (See also the World Wide Labyrinth Locator).

Use of the Data for Further Research

The two documents (the Introduction and the present document) together form a research paper in two sections. The Index and supporting material will hopefully provide a rich resource and you are welcome to use these materials for personal research, with appropriate acknowledgement (please note the copyright statement on the first page). I would be glad to hear of any research arising from these materials and have a particular interest in teaching and learning initiatives with the labyrinth.

Numbers and Countries: Technical details

For ease of reference and comparison, I have kept to the World Wide Labyrinth Locator practice of listing labyrinths in England and Scotland separately (this would also apply to any Welsh and Northern Irish labyrinths in university and college settings, but I have found none so far).

The Index is organised into countries; within that framework, each college or university is listed alphabetically by name. The USA section is sub-divided by State for ease of reference. I have kept count of labyrinths, numbering each entry (see Index Key, below. See also the Introduction for discussion of ‘what to count’ which is more complex than at first appears). I quickly found that additional labyrinths led to extensive re-numbering and to minimise this, have kept to a running total country by country, rather than a running total for the whole Index. Table 3, below, is an example from the Index, the first entry. For administrative purposes, in addition to a ‘country heading’ (the first row), I have used country references (column 1, e.g. Australia = AUS). These are as published by the International Organization for Standardization (ISO). For England and Scotland, the ISO provides no separate country code but offers a ‘reserved’ code, ENG for England, SCT for Scotland (details at <https://www.iso.org/obp/ui/-iso:code:3166:GB>).

What's where?

In this example, we're looking at information about Charles Sturt University, on one specific site: the Australian Centre for Christianity and Culture (ACCC).

- Column 1 gives a running total of labyrinths in university, college and research settings in Australia (this is the first of seven Australian labyrinths listed).
- Column 2 gives the main campus address and website. Where another college or university is on the same campus, this is also shown in Column 2. (See Index Key below for recording of shared campuses and adjacent labyrinths).
- Column 3 gives a brief description of the labyrinth itself including a 'presence confirmed' record of evidence that the labyrinth is still there.

- Column 4 provides further information including the use of the labyrinth in particular contexts (in the above example, it is part of the Pilgrim Walk); links to images and to further information, and specific details about the whereabouts of the labyrinth including campus maps where available.
- A WWLL reference in column 4 shows that the labyrinth is listed in the World Wide Labyrinth Locator, where further information may be found: see Introduction for discussion, and <https://labyrinthlocator.com/>. The reference number is included for administrative purposes and will not assist WWLL searches (see WWLL for search guidance).

Endnotes

I have made ample use of endnotes, for the references and links, the quirky details, the stories that bring the campus and labyrinth to colourful life but that would not fit readily into the main body of the Index. It is here that you will find stories of communities and teams coming together; individual lives, including memorials and celebrations, a proposal and a coming-out story; historical notes; values expressed in the crafting of labyrinths; playful approaches (a temporary ice rink?) and much more.

Omissions, Mistakes, Feedback, New Additions

If you have read the Introduction that accompanies the Index, you may feel some sense of déjà vu: the following two paragraphs appear in both documents to be sure of reaching you!

I have relied mainly on web searches, supplemented by other sources including literature in this field and many lists of local and regional labyrinths. Though my search has been as comprehensive as I could make it, there will certainly be omissions. I appreciate the support of numerous people in alerting me to labyrinths I might otherwise have missed, and in helping me with a few labyrinths that no longer exist (recorded in a Table of 'lost labyrinths' at the end of the Index).

I hope to update the Index regularly and would be glad to receive information about labyrinths not present in the Index including, of course, newly created labyrinths. Mistakes are my own, and corrections to the data will be most welcome. Contact me at jansellers.labyrinth@gmail.com

Before reading on...

Enjoy your exploration of these labyrinths around the world. But take a breathing space, first, with these words from my friend and mentor, the late Professor Emeritus Reverend Bernard Moss. In his Conclusion to Learning with the Labyrinth (2016, p.219), Bernard wrote about 'the gift to us all that is the labyrinth' and the invitation within that gift:

... an invitation to seek a better, more humane way of being and doing... allowing the human spirit – however we conceive it – to infuse and enthuse our shared teaching and learning, so that what we seek to offer our students is ultimately life-enhancing. So, no neat and tidy conclusion - but a vision and a hope and a continuing journey, which we trust will continue to be a privilege and a delight. Travel well.

Index Key: Common Abbreviations and Acronyms
AUS. 001	Numbers in the left-hand column are a running total of labyrinths per country, preceded by the ISO 3166 country code (as used in the Olympics). This is primarily for editorial use, to aid amendments. To the left is the first instance: Australia, entry 001.
COM	This additional code refers to labyrinths that are (a) adjacent to, or on campus and (b) are owned by an organisation with a strong relationship with the university or college, e.g. a founding body or a campus ministry. There are shared commitments (e.g. to student wellbeing), hence the code COM. The labyrinth is accessible to the academic community.
FAE	This additional code refers to labyrinths at Colleges of Further and Adult Education and other technical and specialist colleges, serving people aged 16+ with a programme of courses below BA/BSc level.
If no number is given, the entry has not been counted in the total of further and higher education labyrinths. The entry is here in the Index because (code in left-hand column):
n/a	(a) It is a cross-reference (e.g. a recent institutional change of name), or (b) It is one of a few entries in the Index that don't quite fit the other categories in this Table.
ADJ	The labyrinth is adjacent (e.g. in a neighbouring park); I have not searched systematically for such labyrinths but have noted them for reference in the Index where I have come across them. The academic community, or students specifically, have free access but the labyrinth is not within the boundaries of their own campus or site, nor does it belong to an organisation with a strong link to the university or college.
NB	Not yet built, but plans/construction in progress as of 2021.
SC	Shared campus. This institution is not the 'lead institution' responsible for creation or management of the labyrinth. The labyrinth is listed elsewhere in the Index, against the name of the institution responsible for the labyrinth.

Costa Rica

Note for readers: Film, pdf, map and visit arrangements for Costa Rica's University Labyrinths

Ronald Esquivel is the designer of all of Costa Rica's university labyrinths. Rather than repeat information for each entry, please see here for the following resources, cross-referenced where relevant within the individual labyrinth entries below.

1. Esquivel, 2014
Short film in Spanish, includes images and design for the EARTH University labyrinths (one still existing, one no longer there), <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=J2OBAP9IRJO>.
2. Esquivel, 2016
Pdf with brief introduction (in English), diagrams and images, including the first seven University of Costa Rica labyrinths (i.e. all except the most recent, Laberinto Unidad). <http://gaiacr.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/Gaia-Labyrinths-3F.pdf>
3. Esquivel, 2020
Film (in English) of Labyrinth Society Virtual Gathering presentation (c. 90 min; $12). Explores principles, design and purpose of 17 Costa Rican labyrinths including many of the university labyrinths. 'Unique

Labyrinths of Costa Rica': see <https://thelabyrinthociety.gumroad.com/>

4. Map by Ronald Esquivel, undated

'Mapa Laberintos en Costa Rica' provides details of every labyrinth in Costa Rica. This interactive map includes contact information for visits and further information about each of the labyrinths listed below, for both EARTH University and the University of Costa Rica (not yet including the most recently created UCR labyrinth, Laberinto Unidad, the Labyrinth of Unity). To find the map, scroll down on this website: <http://biocreacion.org/laberintos-para-encontrarse/>

Visiting arrangements

On the map, green markers denote public sites, blue markers denote private sites, but most give contact details (also available on the WWLL). All university labyrinths in Costa Rica may be visited during university opening hours once normal practice is resumed. At present, enquire in advance. Advance arrangements are essential for the EARTH University (a gated campus).

The Counseling Center also has a canvas labyrinth.	WWLL 4900. Another rare example of an indoor, permanent labyrinth in a university setting. Installation follows the creation and donation of the Potsdam Labyrinth in canvas, by the University's Counseling Center, in 2002 in response to the attacks on the World Trade Center in 9/11 and to honour the courage and resilience shown by students and community. The permanent labyrinth, also a Counseling Center initiative, forms the main feature of a Labyrinth or Relaxation Room. Wyoming
Index ends here (no known university or college labyrinths in Wyoming at present). Appendices, selected references and endnotes follow.

Appendix 1. Historical record: 'Lost' Labyrinths in Higher Education Settings

University or College	Notes (in alphabetical order, by country; USA entries also by State)
Adelaide College of Divinity, Adelaide, South Australia, Australia	2005-2016, Contemporary design by artist Cedar Prest. Pavers in lawn, with chalice and wafer at centre. 30 ft. diameter. Decommissioned by the College in 2016 (source: correspondence with artist). A unique labyrinth by this artist who specialises in glass: the labyrinth appeared in stylised form as the College logo for some years. Image in artist's Gallery, https://www.cedarprest.com.au/labyrinths/
EARTH University (Escuela de Agricultura de la Region Tropical Humeda), Guácimo, Limón Province, Mercedes, Costa Rica	Laberinto Aspiración (the Labyrinth of Aspiration), designed by Ronald Esquivel, built in the teaching faculty's residential area. This labyrinth was not tended to in the long term and is no longer there. The University has another labyrinth on its campus, see main Index. Source: personal communication, 8 June 2021.
St. Martin's College (now University of Cumbria), Lancaster, Lancashire, England	Created c. 1997, no longer present by 2010. The earliest known contemporary English labyrinth to be designed for walking outdoors in a university or college setting. Paint on tarmac outside chapel, the project of Stephen G. Wright. <sup>134</sup> Appears to have been removed when Gateway Building was constructed nearby. Source: personal communication; Google Earth images, 2000, best image 2003.
University of Liverpool, Ness Botanic Gardens, Ness, Cheshire, England	Present from c. 2009 until 2016-17. Mown grass labyrinth, sometimes planted with long grasses. Source: Google Earth, image 2018; personal communication May 2021.
ECAM University, Lyon, France	2015-17. Built on adjacent Abbey land. Student arts project (American/French) led by artist Reginald Adams. Labyrinth lost due to construction of new visitor facilities at the Abbey (confirmed, Google Earth image 27 April 2018).
Prescott College, Prescott, Arizona, USA	Created 2014. Labyrinth no longer exists (it is possible that this labyrinth was built for a specific event). <sup>135</sup>
Loyola University Chicago, Lake Shore Campus, Chicago, Illinois, USA	Created 2010. Visible from Google Earth in March 2018, no longer visible by October 2018. Was on patio overlooking Lake Michigan: created as part of a medieval garden, a Medieval Studies project at the Lake Shore Campus. This painted labyrinth has now worn away, though there are hopes to replace it in the longer term. <sup>136</sup>
Northern Illinois University, DeKalb, Illinois, USA	A turf and daffodil labyrinth, created on campus in 2002 as part of the NIU Art Museum's Art without Walls Project. One of a pair of labyrinths designed by Marty and Debi Kermeen for this project. The daffodil labyrinth was in place till 2015 and has since disappeared. The first of the pair of labyrinths is still present in Huntley Park, DeKalb (see World Wide Labyrinth Locator).
Spalding University, Louisville, Kentucky, USA	Created 2013 in Kutz Park (adjacent to the Olympic Gymnasium). Visible on Google Earth, November 2013 to February 2018. Demolition followed, prior to the planned construction of a new contemplative garden across the entire site, including a new labyrinth. There is no news on the University website regarding completion of the garden, but hopefully this entry amongst lost labyrinths may prove temporary.
University of Maine, Hutchinson Center, Maine, USA	WWLL 6228, created 2015. A labyrinth was painted at the far end of the middle car park, by Dee Clark. There is no trace of it now (Google Earth image May 2018).

Greenfield Community College, Greenfield, Massachusetts, USA	Removed by 2014. Was located to north of NE corner of East Building, against a shelter belt of trees. A labyrinth was on this campus from at least January 2009 when a peace vigil was held. By May 2014 the site was occupied by an array of solar panels (Google Earth image).
Augsburg University, Minneapolis, Minnesota, USA	Created 2008, a Medieval Studies/Campus Beautification Day initiative. Demolished c. 2017-2020 due to site redevelopment (Google Earth).
Concordia University, St Paul, Minnesota, USA	Created by Farm in the City, a garden labyrinth, which due to redevelopment was on its second location on campus. Visible from Google Earth June 2019 but later images show it completely removed. Labyrinth was in a garden near Hamline Street N, between the Arndt Science Building (and the Buetow Music Center).
University of St. Thomas, Gainey Conference Center, Owatonna, Minnesota, USA	Created 2010, an Eagle Scout project for the University's Conference Center. The University sold this site in 2014.
City University of New York (CUNY, New York), USA	Outdoor garden courtyard labyrinth featured in a CUNY News article about developing and sustaining values within an Ethical Law programme. Site was sold and despite initial plans, no labyrinth appears to have been included in the new building. For references to the place of the labyrinth within Contemplative Law, see endnote. <sup>137</sup>
State University of New York (SUNY Albany), Inter-Faith Center, Albany, New York, USA	A small labyrinth under trees, created 2013, the initiative of the Executive Director of the InterFaith Center, Donna Chrisafulli, in partnership with Eagle Scout Alesion Fasulo. The Inter-Faith Center was closed in 2017 and campus ministry moved to other locations. With lack of use, the labyrinth has gradually sunk into the ground, though the bench is still there. <sup>138</sup>
Stony Brook University, Stony Brook, New York, USA	The Red Dragon Labyrinth, in place c. 2005-2020 and lost in site redevelopment. Professor Emeritus Tony Phillips of the University's Mathematics Department has made a wide range of teaching resources available online, relating to mathematics and labyrinths, see endnote. <sup>139</sup>
Unification Theological Seminary, Barrytown, New York, USA	The Seminary has moved from this location and is now using this site solely as a Conference Center (no apparent student presence). The labyrinth is, or was, located on one of the lawns near trees, well to NNE of main building. A second, small labyrinth also existed on this campus and is pictured on the Conference Center website, https://uts.edu/barrytown-conference-center
Marylhurst University, Marylhurst, Oregon, USA	The University closed in 2018. The labyrinth may still be there, on the east patio outside the Schoen Library. Image (2018), https://sites.google.com/a/marylhurst.edu/labyrinth-group-at-marylhurst/home
Eastern University, St. Davids, Pennsylvania, USA	WWLL 7100. A three-circuit classical labyrinth of paving stones on grass, created in 2017 by a Development Studies seminar group. This temporary labyrinth did last for some years but is no longer there. Remit of the Office of Faith and Practice, https://www.eastern.edu/student-life/faith-practice/labyrinth-resources . Work with rope labyrinths continues, with hopes for a more permanent installation in future. <sup>140</sup>
Green Mountain College, Poultney, Vermont, USA	WWLL 2438. The College closed in 2019. The labyrinth may still be there, next to what was then the Griswold Library (address: 426 Granville Street). Image (2018), Google Earth.

<sup>22</sup> Faint traces of the earliest, 1999-2006 labyrinth are still visible on Google Earth (June 2021), very close to the spiral labyrinth. To find this (though it may be more evident from Google Earth than on the ground), stand at the far edge of the spiral labyrinth, facing Bateman Walk. Turn to the right (east) and walk in a straight line, stopping when you are about halfway between two trees. You are close to the centre of the old labyrinth.

The seven circuit labyrinth at Greys Court draws on medieval symmetry, perhaps (where labyrinths are concerned) expressed at its finest in the 13th century, 11 circuit labyrinth at Chartres Cathedral, France. The design of the path of the seven circuit labyrinths at the Universities of Kent and Nottingham draw on the same principles of symmetry. Shelton's discussion is therefore of direct relevance to these labyrinths, and to canvas labyrinths with the same path design, including the Chartres Essence pattern (Paths of Peace, USA; Veriditas, USA) and the Canterbury Labyrinth pattern (The Labyrinth Builders, UK; Paths of Peace, USA).

<sup>90</sup> Care should be taken in researching the history of labyrinths: the subject attracts speculation and there is a lot of mistaken 'information' to be found. For example, Hofstra describe their labyrinth pathways as 'degrees' and refer to a proscription on designs of more than 11 'degrees' due to the betrayal of Christ by the 12th apostle. To my knowledge there is no literature to support this idea and there are in fact larger labyrinth patterns. Examples include the 15 circuit classical labyrinth, common in Scandinavia and also found in one instance in England, 'Troy Town' (Saward 2003, p.123). In manuscript form, there is a 9th century labyrinth design with 18 circuits, within a document about St. Edmund, King of East Anglia (reference below). Regarding labyrinth paths, I have not previously come across the term 'degrees' in this context: it is common to talk about a labyrinth in terms of the number of circuits that the path takes around the centre, eg. the classical labyrinth has seven circuits, the medieval Chartres labyrinth has 11 circuits and so forth.
